>Whoever came up with the concept that time slows down during the most heart-stopping of moments was lying. The moment was too fast for Sasuke. Somehow even faster than his Sharingan.

All he knew was that Naruto was in front of him and that blood was pooling down from the wound in his chest. Sasuke's hand twitched in remembrance to that day when it was him causing that same kind of injury. Only that time, the wound closed almost immediately after he dropped the hand. This time, the wound stayed open.

It wasn't going to heal this time.

His breath hitched when Naruto started to stagger and fall. Sasuke reflexively reached to catch the blond. They crashed to the ground, but Sasuke resolutely ignored any pain he could've felt from it. His breathing was sporadic when compared to Naruto's slowing breathing.

Words tumbled out of his mouth. He wasn't even sure what he was saying, but he knew, he just knew he had to berate Naruto in some way. Tell him he was an idiot. That he could protect himself and that he should worry about himself. Tell him to fucking stop bleeding and don't leave him please!

"You fucking idiot, why would you do that?!"

His response was weak laugh that turned into a cough. "You should know better than anyoneâ€¦ my body moved on its own to protect my precious person."
